HEIDECKE STATE FISH & WILDLIFE AREA

Heidecke Lake, formerly Collins Lake, is a Commonwealth Edison cooling lake which has been leased to the Department of Conservation for fishing and hunting.

FACILITIES

Boats — Only boats for fishing or duck hunting are allowed on the lake. No water skiing, swimming, sailboating or wading allowed.

All boats must have a gasoline powered motor as a main propulsion unit.

For duck hunting, all boats must be at least 16' in length and have at least a 60" beam with the duck blind built on the boat.

Concessionaire — A concessionaire has boats and motors for rent and bait for sale. The location is near the boat launching area.

Fishing — Heidecke Lake has a good fish population, resulting primarily from a comprehensive stocking program initiated shortly after the lake was leased in 1978. Pole and line fishing only is permitted with anglers limited to using two poles per fisherman.

To avoid the possibility of overharvest and thus assure a good fishery in the future, it was necessary to impose a minimum length and daily catch limits.

Fish size and catch limits are established by our Fisheries Division and are set to protect and preserve the fisheries resource. Strict adherence to the size and catch limits will assure quality fishing opportunities for present and future generations. The limits are posted at the site and are strictly enforced.

The lake has produced some trophy size bass.

Anglers who catch legal sized fish but do not desire to keep them are encouraged to return the fish to the lake.

All sub-legal sized fish caught must be released immediately after catching to have the maximum chance of survival. Fish are measured from the tip of the mouth when closed to the tip of the tail when compressed and while lying flat on top of a ruler.

The boating access is open from 6:00 AM to sunset. Bank fishing access is open from 6:30 AM to sunset.

GOOSE LAKE PRAIRIE STATE NATURAL AREA

THE NATURAL SCENE

Goose Lake Prairie, one of the largest prairies in the United States, is the largest remnant of prairie left in Illinois, the "Prairie State". As such, it is of historical, as well as natural importance. Illinois was once almost three-fourth covered by prairie; now these grasslands have been converted to croplands. This state today is very different from the frontier out of which pioneers struggled to make a living. Goose Lake Prairie is a reminder of the environment with which Illinois Indians and settlers had to contend; a place of grasses, wildflowers, fires and seemingly ceaseless prairie winds.

The original purchase of 240 acres of land was made by the state in 1969. Later additions have brought the total acreage to 2,468 acres. Approximately 1,537 acres are dedicated as Illinois Nature Preserve.

Goose Lake Prairie is a haven for wildlife. Wild ducks and geese concentrate on the marshland in spring and fall. Rare species such as Henslow's sparrow are common here. The plains pocket gopher inhabits the area as well as such large animals as deer and coyote.
